No farmer should be without plenty of small fruit on his farm, and if he should have some to sell all the batter, for he will often find that these little things will bring him in marly as much ready cash his what he may call his staple crops, as the latter requires more hard work and outlay to produce. — Inthony Journal.

A weed may properly be defined to be "a plant out of plane". A brautiful toes in the misulis of a cornfield, where it has no business at all, but on the contart, is in the way, and interferes with the proper culture of the grain, would be a weed. The writer knows of a vineyard of several acres now overgrown with separagus seedings, which have sprouted from seeds dropped by birds. These are, of course, most excellent in their plane, but where they are now are ace, but where they are now are othing more of less than weeds.
